Dear Admiral Hillenkoetter:

I have your letter of October 5th, relative to the OSS History.

In examining the history, I found certain errors in the statement of facts. In order to make proper correction, it has been necessary to obtain statements from Key personnel of the OSS who had definite knowledge of the circumstances surrounding the different operations.

This has been done and the statements are in course of preparation. I have talked with Kermit Roosevelt and will send the papers on to him as soon as they come into my possession.

Sincerely yours,

signed - William J. Donovan

Dear General Donovan:

Just today I have received a memorandum from the Director of the Joint Staff which reads, as follows: "Two agencies of the Joint Chiefs of Staff have indicated an urgent need for the completed history of the Office of Strategic Services and have requested that it be furnished at the earliest practicable date. In view of this, information is requested as to when the document may be expected." Could you please give me the information requested in order that I may transmit it to the Joint Chiefs of Staff?

Mr. Kewitt Goddard, of course, stands ready to confer with you if he can be of any assistance in this matter.

With very best wishes, believe me,

Sincerely,

MEMORANDUM FOR: The Joint Chiefs of Staff

SUBJECT: History of the Office of Strategic Services

1. The Central Intelligence Group, the predecessor of this Agency, was directed by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to prepare a history of the organization and operations of the Office of Strategic Services. This has been in process for several years. On completion of the first draft, about eighteen months ago, a copy was sent to Major General William J. Donovan, Director of the Office of Strategic Services, for his comments. This first draft copy was returned with General Donovan's comments which were incorporated into a second draft at which time General Donovan asked to see the second draft and to make further comments. This second draft was furnished General Donovan the early part of this year, and so far we have heard nothing further from him directly.

2. The history of the Office of Strategic Services was classified by the Joint Chiefs of Staff as TOP SECRET, but we have recently learned that General Donovan has forwarded to various other people separate volumes of the history for further comment and rewrite.

3. It is requested that the Joint Chiefs of Staff give guidance to the Central Intelligence Agency in this matter—whether to wait until General Donovan returns a corrected draft, or whether to press him for a return in the immediate future.
